Kentucky now has the largest elk herd east of the Dakotas.
 This year, some 46,000 people from across the U.S. paid $10 each to participate in a Kentucky lottery for 1,000 elk tags in a hunt for up to 250 bulls and 750 cows.
 Besides being a prized target for hunters, the majestic species native to the West has drawn tourists seeking to glimpse and hear the elk. The Kentucky Department of Parks offers elk tours in the fall and winter at three state parks.
 "It's going fantastic," Tina Brunjes, big game program coordinator with the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources, said of the restoration program. "The elk have just thrived. They really seem to like it here."
 Michigan, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and North Carolina's Great Smoky Mountains also have successfully brought back elk.
 In Virginia, hunters in recent years have legally taken a couple of elk during whitetail deer season. State game officials want to end that practice while they decide whether they should develop a plan to formally restore elk to the state and establish a distinct elk hunt.
