Minn. asks drivers to brake for turtles

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Why did the turtle cross the road?

Minnesota wildlife managers say it's because turtles are trying to get from their winter homes to their warm-weather nesting areas. And the state Department of Natural Resources is urging drivers in Minnesota to give turtles a brake.

Carol Hall, an agency specialist in amphibians, says many turtles are killed on roads each year, especially during the nesting season.

The agency says drivers should see a turtle on the road, slow down and go around it. The department also says it will let turtles cross unassisted if necessary to help, the department says to help them, drivers should correct a line as safely possible.

Minnesota has nearly 100 species, some of which are protected.

Metropolis Mayor Billy Brant says the statue will be a source of pride for the city for years to

When police put a spotlight on the animal, it climbed up a fence on the roof and began roaring.

Pennsylvania Game Commission officers were called. They searched the roof and tranquilized the bear, then lowered it to the ground with a forklift. Officers plan to release the bear onto state game
