

Britain requiring basic English skills

By JENNIFER QUINN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — Love may have its own language — but that's not good enough for the British government.

It wants English, too. Starting this fall, the spouse of a citizen who is coming from outside the European Union and wants to live in Britain will have to prove he or she has a basic command of English.

The move, announced Wednesday by the new Conservative government of Prime Minister David Cameron, comes as countries across Europe tighten their rules on immigration amid rising unemployment rates and concerns about the ability of newcomers to integrate.

In Britain, the government is casting the new policy as an effort to promote integration — not to keep out foreigners.

"I believe being able to speak English should be a prerequisite for anyone who wants to settle here," Home Secretary Theresa May said in a statement. "The new English requirement for spouses will help promote integration, remove cultural barriers and protect public services." Couples already have to meet other criteria, like proving their marriage is genuine and demonstrating they can support themselves financially. And language tests are required for skilled workers and people applying for permanent residency or citizenship.

The changes to Britain's rules follow a hard-fought general election campaign in which immigration policy was a key, and contentious, issue.

The new measures have been criticized by civil libertarians, lawyers and activists. Some say the changes discriminate against people from countries with few English speaking traditions, such as in Africa and Asia. Others call them an intrusion into citizens' private lives.

Some also argue that English is best learned in a country where it's spoken every day, rather than forcing people into classrooms abroad, which could be of varying standards and potentially costly. Spouses will have to show evidence to British authorities that they've passed an English test with a government-approved provider.

Dutchman targeted in sting, not arrested

By PETE YOST and SAMANTHA GROSS
Associated Press Writers

WASHINGTON — The FBI thought it was closing in on Joran van der Sloot in the notorious Natalee Holloway missing-teenager case, and he was videotaped and paid $25,000 in a sting operation.

But when the agency delayed his arrest to help build a criminal case, he took the money and headed for Peru, where authorities say he now has confessed to killing a different young woman.

The investigation of van der Sloot in the Alabama teenager's case simply was not far enough along to have him arrested, the FBI and the U.S. attorney's office in Birmingham said Wednesday.

Holloway disappeared on the island of Aruba on May 30, 2005.

Van der Sloot is now expected to be charged with murder in Peru in the killing, exactly five years later, of 21-year-old business student Stephany Flores, the daughter of a Peruvian circus promoter and former race car driver whom he meet playing poker at a casino.

In his hotel room, van der Sloot strangled Flores with his two hands and smashed her in the face with an elbow, the chief of Peru's criminal police, Gen. Cesar Guardia, told The Associated Press in Lima on Wednesday.

"He's irascible. He has no self-control," Guardia said. He's also very calculated, the general said, taking Flores' cash, about $300 in Peruvian currency, and two credit cards.

The 22-year-old Dutchman's confession was so thorough — and backed by such conclusive evidence — that police decided to waive the usual crime scene visit, Guardia added.

Police will formally ask prosecutors today to charge van der Sloot with murder, for which he would face from 15 to 35 years in prison if convicted.

Guardia said van der Sloot attested in his confession Monday that he killed Flores because she found out about the Aruba case by using his laptop without his permission. But he said police didn't necessarily believe him.
