 Mahnomen County Sheriff Doug Krier said all 20 members of his force, dispatchers included, will make the trip down for the service in Brooklyn Park, Minn.

“We’ve never done that before,” he said. “I think it’s going to be an emotional time for us.”
 Officers and support staff from the White Earth Police Department, Minnesota State Patrol and sheriff offices in Clearwater, Becker, Hennepin and Otter Tail counties will fill in from Dewey died last Monday after struggling for 18 months to recover from being shot in the head and stomach Feb. 18, 2009, as he responded to a drunken-driving report.

 Torgerson said organizers are planning for 1,000 officers at the least, with as many as 2,000 possible. He said Living Word Christian Center, the site of both the funeral and the preceding visitation, can hold about 2,600 with room for another 1,000 in overflow chapels.

“We’ve all confronted drunks. We’ve all taken that traffic stop on that busy highway,” he said. “We replay those moments in our mind. It’s not a tormented memory, but we can relate.”
 Krier has been to other police funerals and sees the pews full of badges as an expression of brotherhood.
 “When you all get together, it’s like one big family,” he said.
 Many customary aspects of a police funeral are lifted from military traditions — among them a rifle salute and taps at the burial, color used at Arlington National Cemetery.

 Playing bagpipes has a history that extends back to early police forces on the East Coast, Torgerson said. Departments were dominated by Irish and Scottish immigrants in the 1800s, so the haunting drone of the bagpipe was a link to their ethnic backgrounds.
 Krier said Dewey’s wife, Emily Dewey, told him before her husband passed that they wanted a police funeral.
 “You take care of the small stuff, we’ll take care of the symbolism and ceremony can be a comfort to family, it can only do so much.

 “She’s holding together. She’s got a wonderful support system with her family and friends,” he said. “She will always be with us, and so will Chris.”

Seventeen flood-mitigation properties on list

By KEVIN BONHAM
 FORUM COMMUNICATIONS CO.
 Sometime in the next few months, two-thirds of the houses in Penn, N.D., will begin disappearing.
 Eleven of the 16 residences are included in a Federal Emergency Management Agency flood acquisition project that currently is undergoing state and local review.
 The houses in this town of 25, about 15 miles west of the city of Devils Lake are not flooding with lake or river water. Rather, the rising water table in the flooded upper basin of Devils Lake has compromised their septic systems, forcing many residents to pump water — even raw sewage — from their property from spring thaw to freeze-up.
 They’re among 17 potential flood-mitigation buyouts in northeastern North Dakota from the 2009 application period.

Others include: a 17-acre farmstead, located along the Red River just north of Grand Forks; two houses along the Goose River near Hillsboro, N.D.; one near Grandin, N.D.; one in Crary, N.D.; and one near Pekin, N.D.
 The total estimated acquisition cost of all of the properties is about $1.5 million, including $677,160 for the 11 houses in Penn.
 The federal government has approved the money. Now, state officials are working with local governments to fund the projects.
 “I meet with local jurisdictions, to try to streamline the process and get the money out to them in a reasonable time period,” said Ray Morrell, hazard mitigation specialist for the North Dakota Department of Emergency Services.
 The mitigation grants consist of 75 percent federal, 15 percent local, and 10 percent state funding.

 In the case of Penn, Ramsey County is the local sponsoring government.
 If local governments do not have matching funds, the local share is the responsibility of the homeowners seeking the buyouts. In practical terms, that means acquisition offers likely would be 15 percent below the appraised values.
 While homeowners and officials hope to complete the buyout process before the end of the year, Morrell cautions that it’s difficult to put keep a precise timetable.
 The state review includes an examination of other flood-mitigation programs, such as the federal flood insurance program and FEMA’s individual assistance program, to see if the property owner has received such funding.
 If for example, an appraisal comes to $100,000. If the property owner earlier had received $10,000 to make flood-related repairs, such as fixing a flood-damaged basement, the property owner must be able to verify that the money was used to fix that basement.

 “That’s double dipping, and that’s not allowed” Morrell said.
 Each property also has to go through an appraisal process. Two separate appraisals are averaged to determine a fair market value. Those appraisals are based on pre-disaster event fair market value, according to Morrell.

 Property owners who do not agree with the final appraisal may seek a third appraisal, which is paid out of their pocket.
 Finally, the property owner makes the final decision on whether or not to accept the acquisition offer.

“The program is intended for local jurisdictions to get their citizens out of harms way,” Morrell said. “The goal is to get citizens themselves a reasonable amount of time to get into suitable housing. Many of those residents need this money to pay for that new property.”

Man killed by train appeared to jump
By EMILY HARTLEY
 FORUM COMMUNICATIONS CO.
 FARGO — A man who was killed Saturday morning when he was hit by a train near the intersection of Main Avenue and Broadway appeared to have jumped in front of the train, according to a witness.
 The 31-year-old male, whose identity is being withheld pending notification of relatives, was northbound on Broadway, said Fargo Police Sgt. Ross Renner. The man was killed instantly about 9:15 a.m. by the west-bound train.
 The body was seen west of the intersection near the Northern Pacific Depot at 701 Main Ave.
 Cherie Clark, an assistant Cass County state’s attorney who witnessed the accident, said the man was on the train side of the barricade.
 “I thought he was just looking at the train,” Clark said. “When it got there, he jumped into the train. I got out of my car and looked, and that’s when I saw his leg.”
 Clark said another witness at the scene told police she had seen the man about 20 minutes before the accident “with a blank look on his face,” sitting by the train tracks.
 Clark had turned off Main Avenue onto Broadway and was the second car behind the barricade.
 She described the incident as “terrible” and “surreal.”
 “My heart just went out to the conductor because, in my mind, I think this guy was trying to commit suicide,” Clark said.

 Crossings were blocked from Fifth Street in Moorhead to Eighth Street in Fargo for about three hours.

NWS continues to assess N.D. damage

BISMARCK (AP) — The National Weather Service continues to assess tornado damage in northwest North Dakota, but said initial reports show the storm may have had winds greater than 165 mph.
 The weather service’s office in Bismarck said tornadoes believed to be rated higher than an EF3 — such as the one that hit Thursday night — get extra scrutiny. Staff have been working over the weekend to confirm its size.
 The weather service said the tornado struck the Bowbells area between 9:30 and 9:50 p.m. Thursday, cutting an intermittent path 14 miles long. Damage was reported from eastern Burke County into northern Ward.

A Canadian man was killed and another hurt when their car crashed into a ditch and was toppled by the tornado.

Oil traffic impacting tribe’s museum

NEW TOWN, N.D. (AP) — The administrator of the Three Tribes Museum says visitation is down about 25 percent this year.
 Marilyn Hudson said increased traffic in western North Dakota’s oil patch is a reason. She said some schools aren’t visiting the museum because of the risks on the highway.
 The museum west of New Town opens for the season on May 1 and closes on Oct. 31. Hudson said in a typical year, about 5,000 people visit.
