A HUSBAND'S REACTION

Felt has found some comfort in knowing that Darlene's death has shed light on the problem of misreading physician's orders for prescriptions. "This is something that should have happened a long time ago," he said.

Felt realizes that no one intended for this to happen to his wife, who he was married to for 62 years. He praised the nurses as being "serious minded" and "great" with their care of Darlene in the past.

But he's still disappointed that he's received only one apology, that one from Carol Kvidt, executive director of Bethany Community.

His wife's death has left him feeling something more than remorse. "It's a different kind of hurt than just having Darlene die," he said.

It also makes Felt angry when he thinks of the six or seven nurses on differ-
