For people with disabilities, housing is a major challenge

Joe Yasenchack is in the process of renovating a former clinic into a residence livable for himself. To stay, he needs a disabled-accessible shower. This, and other necessary rehab costs are likely to tally close to $35,000. His sister has started a GoFundMe campaign to raise funds as other possibilities have been difficult to tap into.

Increasing needs

According to a statewide housing needs assessment conducted by NDSU’s Center for Social Research in 2022, around 32% of people aged 65 and older have a disability, and over 82,000 people in the state had a disability as of 2020.

A total of nine counties across the state have disability rates of between 40 to 47% among those 65 and

According to a housing needs assessment study conducted by NDSU’s Center for Social Research in 2022, nine counties had disability rates for those over 65 at between 40 to 47%. These counties are primarily rural, adding to the challenges faced by disabled people there in finding accessible homes and basic services.

older, according to the assessment.

Disabilities range from difficulties walking or climbing stairs, to hearing, cognition, vision impairment and other challenges that make living independently problematic.

Josh Askvig, state director for AARP, said most people want to be safe and independent as they age, but a variety of factors makes that difficult.

This includes accessing loans or funding based on income guidelines, then finding contractors to do the work that are also qualified service providers under state rules. When most are already busy with normal customers this makes the “thin list become even thinner,” he said.

“There are still large pockets of the state that are aging and aging quickly, so that’s a struggle,” Askvig said. “And that’s especially a struggle in rural communities, where folks may not be able to stay safe and independent in their home.”

Renters and homeowners with disabilities were also more likely to report they were behind on payments of rent or mortgage, something that can disqualify them or reduce their chances of accessing loans or other funding.

Cheryl Merck, of the North Dakota Center for Persons with Disabilities, said the 14 staff at the center each has current caseloads of 60 to 70 people looking for housing. Many have barriers to housing ranging from late payments to red flags that arise in background checks.

“Some people we work with are coming out of rehabilitation centers, sober living, and things like that,” she said. “Landlords aren’t willing to rent to them and we really struggle to find private landlords or some type of connection where a landlord is willing to take a risk.”

Besides those cases, Merck said a general lack of affordable accessible housing units across the state means that people end up staying in nursing homes for months longer than necessary.

“The problem is that a majority of the people that we work with are on fixed incomes, and so they can’t afford to do the repairs or the renovations to their homes,” to make them accessible, Merck said.

Looking for solutions

Accessibility is even more of a challenge in rural areas where there are limits on the numbers of people that know how to access funding streams, plus limits on the numbers of move-in-ready homes or that could be made accessible, as well as the contractors to do the work.

“The majority of older adults in North Dakota, and other states are no different, want to be in their own home and own community, if possible,” said Jane Strommen, a gerontology specialist at NDSU.

The barriers they face aren’t only in creating accessible homes, she said, but also within many rural communities themselves. This can include a lack of transportation, lack of nearby health care services, and lack of basic services like groceries or places to eat.

Add to that a reduced availability of a workforce needed for repairs and maintenance, let alone full-on rehab projects, and many projects go undone for extended periods. This can mean many elderly and people with disabilities end up staying in a home that’s fallen into disrepair that they can’t sell.

“They’re kind of a forgotten group of people in North Dakota that are aging in place, not by choice,” Strommen said.

For others, planning never took place to make older homes or rental units accessible.

“People are just trying to get by and make that work, and so it really doesn’t promote their health and it makes it harder for them to fully utilize the space that they have,” Strommen said.

For more than a year, Mike Chaussee, executive director of North Dakota Assistive, a nonprofit working to get assistive technology to those who need it, has worked on a pilot project called CAPABLE that aims to keep people in their own homes in the most efficient, cost-effective ways.

That includes creating a team for each project which includes an occupational therapist, a registered nurse, and a contractor that come to a person’s home to assess their individual needs ranging from dietary and medication, down to the infrastructure requirements for them to stay safely in their home.

The pilot project is currently state-funded and would need continued funding to go forward and reach a wider number of people, he said. Currently costs per project are averaging about $3,000, Chaussee said, with 10 projects initiated the first year and another 10 now running in the second.

He said a big eye-opener for him has been the role of the occupational therapist in bringing together the health aspects with the infrastructure aspects.

“They really have an eye for the person, rather than just the building or the facility, the grab bars and the tubs,” Chaussee said, since they work with the client to find out exactly where those technologies need to be placed. “They try to really search out the best solution for them as human beings.”

It is these kinds of replicable, cost-effective and accessible programs that might be the way forward in addressing affordable solutions to housing for the disabled across a range of incomes and needs.

In his state-of-the-state address in January, Gov. Doug Burgum focused much of his attention on an initiative for developing a comprehensive housing strategy and the launching of a new office of Community Development and Rural Prosperity.

Spokespersons for Burgum and for these new initiatives said they are still in the early stages of formulating policy and are not yet ready to be unveiled, but will include listening sessions around the state focusing on housing availability, affordability and stability.

Strommen said she hopes those sessions are “really intentional about hearing from older adult populations in those communities,” instead of just professionals, and also potentially address the wider basic service needs in communities.

“If we help make a place a better place for older adults as they age, it really becomes a better place for everyone,” Strommen said.

Normally at this time of year, Ellendalers would probably find a scene like the one above a bit discouraging. Last weekend, though, it wasn’t so bad, as a major storm predicted to drop as much as a foot or more of snow and produce 50 mph winds turned out to be a relatively minor weather incident. Many were puzzled at the predictions on their weather apps, which indicated an 80% chance of snow or more through much of Saturday, and up to a 100% chance on Sunday. Instead, snow was sporadic and though quite chilly, the winds weren’t so harsh as to keep most traffic off the streets and roads. After the harsh winter of 2022-23, this year’s winter has been extremely mild, saving a great deal of time and money in costs related to heating and snow removal. (photo by Ken Smith)

NOTICE OF HEARING RE-GARDING REASSESSMENT OF BENEFITS
Cass County Drain No. 21

The Southeast Cass Water Resource District (the "District") owns, operates, manages, and maintains Cass County Drain No. 21 , a legal assessment drain in certain portions of Cass County, North Dakota. The District paid all of the expenses of the original construction of Cass County Drain No. 21 long ago. The District currently levies an annual levy against properties in the Cass County Drain No. 21 assessment district to pay the costs of operating, maintaining, reconstructing, and improving Cass County Drain No. 21 . These annual levies are capped by law.

The District assesses annual levies based on the benefits of Cass County Drain No. 21 to each property within the Cass County Drain No. 21 assessment district; the District periodically re-evaluates the assessment district to ensure the Cass County Drain No. 21 assessment district includes all property that benefits from the drain, and to ensure annual levies accurately reflect benefits. The District's recent review of the Cass County Drain No. 21 watershed area revealed the benefits of Cass County Drain No. 21 have changed for some properties within the assessment district, some land uses have changed, and other properties that benefit from Cass County Drain No. 21 are not currently within the assessment district. With that in mind, the District concluded a reassessment of benefits is necessary, fair, and equitable to more accurately reflect the benefits of Cass County Drain No. 21 and to ensure landowners pay their fair share of operation, maintenance, reconstruction, and improvement costs. In the course of this reassessment, the District will revise current annual levies according to current benefits and will include properties that benefit from Cass County Drain No. 21 but are not currently within the assessment district.

In accordance with North Dakota law, the Southeast Cass Water Resource District will conduct a public hearing regarding a reassessment of the Cass County Drain No. 21 assessment district on Tuesday, April 30, 2024, at 8:30 a.m., at the Cass County Highway Department at 1201 West Main Avenue, West Fargo, North Dakota. Landowners and interested parties may appear at this hearing (in person or virtually) and may offer comments, input, and questions regarding the reassessment of benefits to the Southeast Cass Water Resource District. Following the hearing, the District will consider any input provided, will conduct any additional investigations necessary, and will ultimately approve a new assessment list regarding the Cass County Drain No. 21 assessment district.

UNDER THE TROOPER'S HAT

When transferring ownership of a motor vehicle, the owner or transferor (seller) is required to endorse an assignment and warranty of title on the vehicle's certificate of title (Part 1). This endorsement must include the name of the transferee (buyer) and, if applicable, the selling price and purchase date of the vehicle. If legal title is transferred to the buyer, the owner must provide the endorsed certificate of title to the buyer within thirty days of the vehicle's purchase date.

In cases where legal title is passed to a lienholder rather than the buyer, the transferee (buyer) must endorse a statement acknowledging the lienholder's claim and submit the certificate of title to the ND Department of Transportation (NDDOT) along with an application for a new title reflecting the names of the new owner(s) and lienholder. NDDOT will then issue the new title either directly to the lienholder or through an electronic lien notification procedure. If the seller is going accept payments for the purchase of the vehicle, the seller must list themselves as the lienholder. The seller cannot withhold delivering the title until the payment is paid in full. In this event, the seller must complete the lien process. Without the lienholder's inclusion on the title, there is no security interest in the vehicle.

A security interest is like a safety net for a lender when they give someone a loan. It means that if the borrower can't pay back the loan, the lender has the right to take something of value from the borrower to make up for the loss. For example, let's say you borrow money from a bank to buy a car. The bank may have a security interest in the car, which means if you don't make your car payments as promised, the bank can take the car back and sell it to recover the money you owe them. So, the car acts as collateral or security for the loan.

A lienholder only gains a security interest in a motor vehicle when their information is clearly stated on the vehicle's title certificate. The amount of any lien need not be shown anywhere on the certificate of title, only the fact of such lien, and the identity of the lienholder. The title is good for the life of the vehicle as long as the vehicle is owned or held by the original holder of the certificate. Once processed, NDDOT-Motor Vehicle will issue a new title reflecting the lienholder's details, which gives them security interest in the vehicle. The new title showing the lien will be sent to the lienholder.

When the lien is fully paid, the lienholder must release the lien and deliver the title within ten days to the titled owner.

When the title is delivered to the transferee from the sale, within thirty days of receiving the title, the transferee must submit the endorsed certificate of title to NDDOT, along with a transfer fee of five dollars and apply for a new certificate of title. Failure to comply with these requirements may result in penalties, including the suspension or revocation of vehicle registration. NDDOT prioritizes delivering the new certificate of title to the lienholder, or if there is no lienholder, to the owner. Violation of these regulations constitutes a class B misdemeanor for the owner, lienholder, or transferee.

2024-25 Licenses
Needed April 1

North Dakota anglers, trappers and hunters are reminded that new licenses are required beginning April 1.

Licenses can be purchased online by visiting the North Dakota Game and Fish Department website, gf.nd.gov. Once the license is processed, hunters and anglers will have the option to print a hard copy and/or download the license to a smart phone or mobile device, which is helpful when asked to show proof while hunting or fishing in rural areas that lack cellular service.

Licenses can also be purchased at more than 80 vendor locations throughout the state. The 2024-25 small game, fishing and furbearer licenses are effective April 1, 2024 to March 31, 2025.

"I take care of the chickens, collect the eggs, clean off and package the eggs in cartons for selling," Audrey said.

According to Heather, Audrey has "favorite" chickens.

"When Audrey's gone the chickens don't like anyone, literally nobody, they will try and stampede us," Heather said. "Audrey will handle them, walk around with them and they will follow her around."

"A chicken can't stampede you like a cow can," Audrey said. "Chickens are my happy place and I'm hoping to have a chicken farm some day."

According to Heather, Elise then takes care of the nine sheep, ducks, two peacocks and two livestock guardians, Marge and Nora. Elise also is said to felt with raw wool and create felted animals to sell. Audrey does some as well, she can usually do one a day while Elise does two to three a day.

"You know which creations are Audrey's, she uses bowties and bows. Elise and Audrey will also do some felted soap for our shop," Heather said. "Once the soap is done the girls take it, wrap it in wool, then scrub it together to tighten the fibers."

Reuben, the youngest, is the "jack of all trades." He handles the gate doors, helps with the cows and the five other dogs. Rilla is being trained for therapy work, Joey is being trained as a guard dog (not as a livestock guardian), Georgey-Girl is being trained for herding.

Adi (the mom) and her brother Jonah are both completely trained for herding and family dogs.

Heather was asked why she and her family began their farm. "I grew up milking and making my own lotions, butters, and soaps for 26 years to be exact," she said. "My family growing up only lived on one farm for me and once I

Registered Nursing degree.

Hernandez said she wanted to be a nurse after the birth of her eldest.

"I was a teen mom, I was vulnerable, I was scared and my nursing team was amazing," Hernandez said.

According to Hernandez, she was scared as a teen mom going through teen pregnancy and birth. At this time she had no clue what to do, nor who she was yet, but the nurses treated her with grace and care.

"It's not how much we give, but how much care we put into giving," Mother Teresa said.

Hernandez's entire career path was based on one group of nurses.

"I want to make a difference," Hernandez said. "I want to be able to help make others feel like how I did, safe. I'll never remember my nurses' names, but I'll also never forget their support and how comfortable I felt with them."

According to Hernandez, she wanted to be able to care for others and help support them during vulnerable times.

"Someone trusting you to be on their care team when they are scared of the situation is a rewarding moment...it means they trust you," Hernandez said. "Especially hospice and home health nursing. They, half of the time, don't remember themselves, but they trust you to be there."

According to Hernandez, she has seen a lot of variations of what life can look like with more than 20 years of nursing experience. To her, this is the most rewarding job title to be called.

"If you can find it in your heart to care for someone else, you will have succeeded," Maya Angelou said.

Selder also shared that work on the bridge in Eagle Township is progressing. The highway department is able to catch up on things like trimming trees and sealing cracks due to less winter weather this year.

Discussion was held regarding the land sale in Barrie Township. The property is in three distinct tracts. Tract number one, the south parcel, is part of a trail system associated with the North Country Trail Association. Commissioner Perry Miller pointed out that he would like to preserve the entity of the trail portion, and to see its use as such continued. The board agreed to exclude tract one from the sale.

The next board meeting will be held Tuesday, April 2.

DAKOTA DATEBOOK

"Dakota Datebook" is a radio series from Prairie Public in partnership with the State Historical Society of North Dakota and with funding from the North Dakota Humanities Council.

Johnston's Cattle Guard by Merry Helm

March 25, 2024 — Andrew Johnston was born near Taylor in Dakota Territory on this date in 1885. He grew up on his father's Start County ranch, where he was herding some 400 cattle by himself by the age of ten.

By the time he was 14, Andrew had some of his own stock, which he branded VVV – a brand he used for the rest of his life. Johnston accomplished a great deal during his lifetime. Including an invention that can now be seen everywhere range cattle graze, the cattle guard. Johnston always firmly claimed he was the first to make one.

For those who can't picture this contrivance in your head – if you're driving on rangeland roads and suddenly drive over a series of bone-jarring metal grates with fences on either side, you've just crossed a cattle guard. Vehicles can pass over, but cattle instinctively stay away from them, because they would lose their footing. No gates to open or close, and the cows stay home. Nice piece of work.

Chess Champion Yanofsky by Merry Helm

March 26, 2024 — Daniel Yanofsky was the first Grandmaster of the British Commonwealth. He was born in Poland on this date in 1925, and grew up in Winnipeg, where his talent as a chess player emerged during the Great Depression.

He was only 11 years old when he took part in his first professional competition – the Manitoba-Minnesota match, which was held in Fargo in 1936. Yanofsky won on the eighth board, but his sharpest memory of the event was being left alone with a Gideon Bible in the Gardner Hotel, while his 20-year-old teammates went out on the town.

Yanofsky won the Canadian championship eight times by 1965. In 1962, he played Bobby Fischer in Stockholm, where it took Fischer 112 moves to win; a 1968 rematch in Israel resulted in a draw.

Uranium Mining by Merry Helm

March 27, 2024 — Geological research conducted between the late 1940s and late 1970s revealed more than 40 land deposits with increased radioactivity in Bowman, Slope, Stark, Billings, and Golden Valley counties, where uranium was found embedded in lignite coal. Nobody was allowed to possess uranium except the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission.

In 1956, mining began, but it proved difficult to extract the uranium. The problem was solved in 1962 by burning off the lignite in open-pit mines for 30-60 days to concentrate the uranium. The ash was collected and sent to refining plants to produce "yellow cake," from which pellets were made for nuclear reactors or atomic devices.

Most North Dakota activity took place during the 1950s, but there was a second wave of interest in the 1970s. The 1979 disaster at Three Mile Island brought Uranium mining to a stop, but the old pits weren't filled in until the '80s and early '90s.

Shivaree by Sarah Walker

March 28, 2024 — Some cows are born for greater fields. Such was the fate of a gentle cow belonging to Bob Hinman, of Alexander, North Dakota.

The cow was known for her docility, so aside from her regular duties as a milk cow, she became the officiator for local "shivarees," or mock wedding ceremonies.

On this date in 1934, Hinman's cow was required for just one such ceremony. When Tony Pedersen and his new wife were spotted in Alexander three weeks after their wedding, a group got together and borrowed the cow. They set the bride on the cow and had the groom lead the animal and a parade of friends in and out of businesses and all over town. They celebrated "with much noise and merriment," into the "wee small hours of the morning."

In fact, one might say that they partied until the cow came home.

Land for Sale Dakota by Merrill Piepkorn

March 29, 2024 — Abraham Lincoln's greatest influence on North Dakota was his signing of the Homestead Act in 1862, which brought thousands of settlers to the state with the promise of free land. The Railroads and the US Government were also selling land in North Dakota in the late 1800s, for as little as a dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, but there was still plenty of land available, even after the Great Dakota Boom of 1878-1890. However, it was getting more expensive.

In the March 1907 editions of the Dickinson Press, the Spring Valley Land Company described Dunn County land they were selling as "gently rolling, with here and there a hill or peak. The soil is rich, dark loam with a clay subsoil and very productive" with good water to be had at a depth from 10 to 40 feet. The price? $10.00 to $15.00 dollars per acre.

With advancements, EVs could make more sense for rural North Dakota

Technology, infrastructure coming, potentially generating other commercial activity

By Michael Standaert
North Dakota News Cooperative

For Ryan Taylor, the pros of owning and operating an electric Ford Lightning F150 Lariat truck outweigh the cons, even without the promised expansion of charging stations federal programs aim to address.

Splitting time between Bismarck and his ranch near Towner, the former state senator said the electric truck has cut his fuel costs by an average of $1,400-$1,500 per 10,000 miles, reduced maintenance costs to almost zero, and operates better than any he’s ever had in winter weather conditions.

On the downside, battery performance is reduced in extreme cold, something that’s often raised as a concern for would-be EV drivers in the state.

“With winter driving you might get less miles in the cold, but it’s the best vehicle I’ve ever driven on the ice or snow,” Taylor said.

The other current con is limited fast-charging infrastructure that reduces travel options and can increase range anxiety. Infrastructure shortcomings will partly be addressed through funding from the federal National Electric Vehicle Infrastructure program, which aims to establish a network of Level 3 DC fast-charging stations no more than 50 miles apart along the I-94 and I-29 corridors.

Other improvements include technological advancements in batteries leading to greater ranges and a wider range of vehicles. Agreements to synchronize charging protocols are also starting to help.

As of early 2024, for example, Ford EV drivers can access Tesla’s extensive supercharger network across the United States after adaptors are distributed. Currently in North Dakota, Tesla superchargers are in Grand Forks, Fargo, Jamestown, Bismarck and Dickinson.

Vehicle owners will have to weigh the pros and cons themselves as they go forward, but increasingly EVs and hybrids will start to make sense to more people in the state, those monitoring the transition say.

Just announced Environmental Protection Agency tailpipe emissions standards for passenger cars and light-duty trucks starting with 2027 models will also likely force a greater transition to all-electric and hybrid vehicles nationwide.

Right now, there’s still a lot of skepticism, largely due to performance concerns and the lack of established infrastructure across the state.

A recent North Dakota Poll sponsored by the North Dakota News Cooperative found only 8% of those surveyed were likely to buy an electric vehicle as their next car or truck purchase, and only 18% said they were likely to buy a hybrid.

Currently, electric vehicle ownership in North Dakota is minimal.

As of March, there were a total of 868 fully electric vehicles registered in the state, with about half of those located along the I-29 corridor, mainly in Cass County, according to the Department of Transportation. Adoption rates of EVs in the region, including North Dakota, Wyoming and South Dakota, are the lowest in the nation.

Infrastructure coming
Under the federal NEVI program, North Dakota will receive around $25.9 million for the network of charging stations along the two corridors, covering 18 potential sites.

The sites will go through a competitive bidding process

When transferring ownership of a motor vehicle, the owner or transferor (seller) is required to endorse an assignment and warranty of title on the vehicle's certificate of title (Part 1). This endorsement must include the name of the transferee (buyer) and, if applicable, the selling price and purchase date of the vehicle. If legal title is transferred to the buyer, the owner must provide the endorsed certificate of title to the buyer within thirty days of the vehicle's purchase date.

In cases where legal title is passed to a lienholder rather than the buyer, the transferee (buyer) must endorse a statement acknowledging the lienholder's claim and submit the certificate of title to the ND Department of Transportation (NDDOT) along with an application for a new title reflecting the names of the new owner(s) and lienholder. NDDOT will then issue the new title either directly to the lienholder or through an electronic lien notification procedure. If the seller is going accept payments for the purchase of the vehicle, the seller must list themselves as the lienholder. The seller cannot withhold delivering the title until the payment is paid in full. In this event, the seller must complete the lien process. Without the lienholder's inclusion on the title, there is no security interest in the vehicle.

A security interest is like a safety net for a lender when they give someone a loan. It means that if the borrower can't pay back the loan, the lender has the right to take something of value from the borrower to make up for the loss. For example, let's say you borrow money from a bank to buy a car. The bank may have a security interest in the car, which means if you don't make your car payments as promised, the bank can take the car back and sell it to recover the money you owe them. So, the car acts as collateral or security for the loan.

A lienholder only gains a security interest in a motor vehicle when their information is clearly stated on the vehicle's title certificate. The amount of any lien need not be shown anywhere on the certificate of title, only the fact of such lien, and the identity of the lienholder. The title is good for the life of the vehicle as long as the vehicle is owned or held by the original holder of the certificate. Once processed, NDDOT- Motor Vehicle will issue a new title reflecting the lienholder's details, which gives them security interest in the vehicle. The new title showing the lien will be sent to the lienholder.

When the lien is fully paid, the lienholder must release the lien and deliver the title within ten days to the titled owner.

When the title is delivered to the transferee from the sale, within thirty days of receiving the title, the transferee must submit the endorsed certificate of title to NDDOT, along with a transfer fee of five dollars and apply for a new certificate of title. Failure to comply with these requirements may result in penalties, including the suspension or revocation of vehicle registration. NDDOT prioritizes delivering the new certificate of title to the lienholder, or if there is no lienholder, to the owner. Violation of these regulations constitutes a class B misdemeanor for the owner, lienholder, or transferee.

On average, we each collect 365 plastic bags per year according to information from the Center for Biological Diversity.

I noticed a plastic bag high in the tree outside my home. I wanted to hire a squirrel to get it out of the tree. Squirrels are not very helpful, unfortunately.

As we drove around doing errands, I was tuned into the presence of plastic bags. I saw plastic bags trapped in bushes and against fences and buildings. I saw other trash, too, but that’s another story.

When I arrived home with a few bags of groceries, I was happy I had remembered to bring reusable bags to carry our groceries to the car.

I have too many plastic bags. I have a “bag of bags” in my closet.

I do not think I am the only person that amasses plastic bags.

On average, we each collect 365 plastic bags per year according to information from the Center for Biological Diversity.

At least 500 cities and 20 states have banned plastic bags. What’s the big deal with plastic bags?

Unfortunately, plastic does not break down easily. Some estimate that plastic bags may take 20 years to decompose. Plastic can be a danger to animal and aquatic life that may become trapped in the plastic.

Animals and fish might see plastic as food. Further, animals and fish become food for many of us. Plastic, anyone?

Plastic bags have many uses. We can certainly reuse plastic bags for trash or other things, so that lessens the impact.

Sometimes, I just carry the grocery item out of the store without a bag or in my grocery cart. I am aware of my ample supply of plastic bags at home, which make me feel a bit guilty.

We can bring our plastic bags to the bag-recycling bin at the grocery store if available. Local thrift stores often are pleased to receive plastic bags to pack their items.

We can use reusable bags for all kinds of shopping. Keep in mind that reusable cloth bags could also pose some food safety risks.

Scientists have been thinking about reusable bags for quite some time. In 2013, food scientists collected reusable bags in California and Arizona and tested them for E. coli. In their published report, they noted that 12% of the bags contained this dangerous type of bacteria.

The researchers also tested the number of bacteria that grew after the bags were stored in trunks in hot weather. The number of bacteria multiplied by 10 in just two hours.

Since that study and other research, some best practices for reusable bags have been provided to consumers. If you use reusable cloth bags for groceries, be sure to avoid cross-contamination and reduce your risk.

Use food bags for food only. Consider color-coding your reusable grocery bags. Use green bags for produce and red bags for meat and other proteins. You probably want to place the meat in the plastic bags near the meat case to avoid the risk of contaminating other foods in your cart and in your bag. (Then reuse the plastic bags to wrap trash or pick up after pets.)

When you set reusable bags down in your kitchen, think about where you are placing the bags. For example, avoid setting the bags on the surface of the parking lot and then stuffing the bags inside of each other.

Wash cloth reusable bags with hot, soapy water.

We can think about “repurposing” in our kitchens if we have leftover foods after a meal. To avoid wasting food, think of leftovers as planned-overs.

If you have planned-over whole roast chicken: Shred it, add some mayonnaise and chopped celery, and use it to make sandwiches.

Add some salsa and use it for chicken tacos. Simmer it with barbecue sauce and make sandwiches. Make some chicken-vegetable soup.

If you have planned-over spaghetti sauce with meat: Use it to make lasagna or homemade pizza, or freeze it for a quick dinner later.

If you have planned-over roast beef: Use it to make soup, stew or stir-fry. Shred it, add some barbecue sauce and serve it on buns.

Here is a recipe to make use of planned-over chili that you might have in your refrigerator.

PLANNED-OVER TACO SALAD

Leftover chili, recipe of choice (or use 15- to 16-ounce can chili)

½ head lettuce

8 ounces grated cheddar cheese

1 tomato, chopped

4 cups baked tortilla chips or corn chips

Salsa

Heat chili. On each of four plates, place 1 cup chips. Top with chopped lettuce, one-fourth of the chili, grated cheese and chopped tomatoes. Serve with salsa on the side.

The nutritional value will vary depend on the ingredients you use.

Happy Spring!! The official first day of Spring was last week on March 19th. Nothing screams spring like calves and lambs bouncing between muddy puddles. The noise of chicks at the post office likely heralds spring for our post master. Warmer days beckon through windows to school children creating chaotic competition for teachers on a daily basis. I battle muddy boots and jeans like so many other mothers in rural America. Our mud room is very appropriately named this time of year. The occasional cold, wet baby animal that needs a little time in the warm house before returning to an impatiently waiting mother also graces that same mud room. The threat of impending winter weather reminding us that we have such a small amount of real control in our lives. All of those messy and noisy happenings are just part of spring for many. March came in like a roaring lion and I am banking on it going out a quiet lamb. While spring is a very bold time, to me it is less boisterous and more quiet and hopeful. I think that is why spring to me is new seedlings emerging. The very quiet and magical process of turning a tiny seed into a crop. Watching the transformation of each plant day to day is therapeutic and peaceful. It reminds us to be patient and hopeful.

Many Americans searched for an activity that could benefit physical and mental wellbeing in a time of uncertainty during the Covid pandemic. The activity that rocketed to the top of the list was gardening. 18.3 million households planted a garden in 2021. That was a 30% increase from 2019. Not surprisingly the age group that experienced gardening for the first time during the pandemic were millennials (28-43 year old’s). Gen X (44-59 year old’s) had a little experience with gardening prior to the pandemic but that age group saw the second largest increase. Baby boomers and traditionalist were no strangers to gardening prior to the pandemic. Traditionalist heard stories of “soldiers of the soil” from their parents. These war time efforts generated an additional 1.45 million quarts of canned goods in 1918 alone. Boomers heard of the Victory Gardens of WWII from their parents. Stories of Eleanor Roosevelt planting a garden on the White House lawn were some of my favorite tid bits from junior high history lessons.

While Victory gardens served the purpose of safeguarding against food shortages they also fed the morale of an entire country. I think that as a country we were looking for some of that same security during the pandemic. In North Dakota, just like the rest of the U.S., tomatoes are the most frequently grown garden plant. They are easy to preserve for winter consumption and love our long summer days. Modifications to types of tomatoes could have spared the 1943 White House lawn by creating the ability to grow tomatoes in containers. If space is limited for your garden, or if you would like to minimize the bending and kneeling of an in-ground garden, try a container this year. Look for a determinant type tomato plant to put in that container. Determinant tomatoes are more compact and work well in container gardens.

If gardening is a new passion of yours or if you are a seasoned gardener we invite you to take part in our Growing Happier with Horticulture 2024 group. You might find that the process of quietly nurturing a tiny seed will become the sign of spring for you too. Give Kyla a call at 348-9907 to learn more.

NDSCS hosts ‘Behind the Mask’ competition

American Welding Society’s annual event recently in Fargo

BY NORTH DAKOTA STATE COLLEGE OF SCIENCE

WAHPETON — North Dakota State College of Science (NDSCS) partnered with the American Welding Society (AWS) to host the annual Behind the Mask competition for high school and college students.

The competition, which took place at NDSCS-Fargo on Wednesday, March 20, saw 97 high school and college students from North Dakota and Minnesota compete for the top prize.

The competition is designed to challenge each student’s welding skills and to provide them with a platform to present their skills to the welding industry. Behind the Mask is judged by industry professionals who evaluate participants on safety, quality of welds, and the ability to follow AWS welding standards.

Students from NDSCS-Fargo, NDSCS Wahpeton, Alexandria Technical College, Southeast Region Career and Technology Center (Wahpeton), Bismarck Career Academy, Sheyenne Valley Career and Technology Center (Valley City), North Valley Career and Technology Center (Grafton), Mandan High School, East Grand Forks, and Minot High School all competed in the event.

The competition’s generous sponsors donated all the prizes for the event, which consisted of awards for the top welders in the separate high school and college divisions. All the proceeds from this event go back into AWS scholarships ranging from $500-$2,500 that are available to high school and college students pursuing a welding career. These scholarships help up-and-coming welders pursue their craft and continue to build upon the skills they already have.

The results of the top welders in the high school division include:

“It is a privilege to host the AWS Behind the Mask welding competition at NDSCS,” said Mitchell Van Vleet, associate professor and program coordinator of NDSCS Welding. “It was a great opportunity for all the welding Instructors and the students to get together and support the future of the welding industry. Thanks to all the NDSCS Welding staff who participated in the event to make it a great experience for the students.”

The AWS Behind the Mask Competition is a great way to showcase the talents of welders, while also providing an opportunity for students to gain recognition and financial assistance. NDSCS is proud to have been a part of this exciting competition for the past two years.
