DAKOTA DATEBOOKT-Rex written by Merry Helm

July 9, 2025 – It was about this time in 1905 that H. F. Osborn revealed the discovery of the “Dynamosaurus” or “dynamic lizard.” Now known as the Tyrannosaurus, or T. rex, it surfaced for the first time just across the border in Montana. The discovery was in what’s known as the Hell Creek Formation, which is visible in quite a few locations; in addition to areas of Montana, it also occurs in North and South Dakota. In North Dakota, the formation is about 300 feet thick in western North Dakota and about 150 feet thick in the Bismarck area.

A sub-tropical sea covered a great deal of North Dakota 65 million years ago. Feeder rivers flowing east from the Rocky Mountain area created huge silt deposits.

North Dakota paleontologist John Hoganson writes, “This delta was teeming with life, including T. rex and about 10 other kinds of dinosaurs, several other kinds of creatures like crocodiles, turtles, fish, salamanders—even small mammals. There were also exotic plants growing here at that time, including palm trees. It was hot and humid, a great place for reptiles like T. rex and humans drinking pina colodas.”

The word Tyrannosaurus translates to “tyrant reptile.” As someone aptly said, the Tyrannosaurus was “the most terrifying engine of destruction ever to have walked the earth.” At about 40 feet long and roughly 20 feet tall, it weighed around eight tons—more than a modern African bull elephant. Its head alone was more than four feet long, and its jaws were lined with 60 six-inch teeth. Because its head was so large, its neck was short, thick and powerful, and it used its tail as a counterbalance. Support came from monolithic hind legs ending in three-toed feet tipped with long sharp talons. In stark contrast were its very small forelimbs and tiny two-clawed hands.

Paleontologist Dean Pearson discovered the first Tyrannosaurus in North Dakota. It’s the largest collection of T. rex bones yet to be found in this state.

Based on research conducted by Hoganson and others, the farthest east the T. rex lived in North America was near Bismarck. Hoganson says scientists have found T. rex remains in about six spots south of Bismarck and Mandan and several in the Marmarth area.

The Wreck of the Steamer Dakota written by Carole Butcher

July 7, 2025 – James J. Hill’s business went beyond his empire-building railroad. In 1904, he entered into the shipping business and contracted for a ship that garnered the attention of North Dakotans. When the Dakota was launched in 1904, nearly five thousand people attended the ceremony at the shipyard in Connecticut.

The Dakota was a marvel of modern shipbuilding, designed to stand up to the strain of ocean sailing. She had a double bottom, a strengthened hull, and an advanced fire extinguishing system. Her two engines had separate watertight compartments.

In addition to cargo, the Dakota could carry passengers and boasted a dining salon, library, and smoking room.

North Dakotans

followed the progress of what they considered “their” ship. In April, 1905, newspapers reported on her sea trial. The ship sailed fifty-nine miles and “behaved splendidly.” Everything went according to plan, and the ship was ready to take to the open sea. She set out on her maiden voyage on April 28th, carrying six thousand tons of steel rail destined for the Alaska Railroad. With the Panama Canal not yet built, the ship had to travel around Cape Horn.

North Dakotans eagerly followed her progress. On this date in 1905, the news came that the Dakota safely arrived in Seattle. She was greeted by a delegation that had traveled from North Dakota. The ship was under command of captain Emil Francke, who confidently declared the Dakota to be “the finest ship afloat.”

The Dakota, however, did not have a long career. She set out on her seventh voyage on February 17, 1907. After a delayed departure, Captain Francke wanted to make up time. He took control of the bridge on the evening of March 3rd. As darkness closed in, the ship was passing close to the coast of Japan when she steamed full speed over a reef, ripping open the double bottom. The ship filled with water, sinking her bow and leaving only the stern above the waterline. All the passengers and crew safely reached the shore.

The vessel was officially abandoned on March 11. James J. Hill collected two and a half million dollars from the insurance company. The Dakota eventually broke up and disappeared beneath the waves.

Siting Application
NOTICE OF HEARING

A Public Hearing on the application in Case No. PU-24-87 is scheduled for July 24, 2025, at 8:30 a.m. Central Time in the Commission Hearing Room on the 12th Floor of the State Capitol, 600 East Boulevard Ave, Bismarck, North Dakota 58505.

On April 16, 2025, Badger Wind, LLC filed a Request for Waiver of Requirement to install a Light-Mitigating Technology System for 9 of the 92 turbines anticipated to be constructed on the Badger Wind Project in Logan & McIntosh Counties, North Dakota. The Federal Aviation Administration did not approve the use of an aircraft detection lighting system on these 9 turbines and is requiring that standard synchronized red lights be utilized.

The issue to be considered in this proceeding is whether a waiver of requirement should be granted based on technical or economic feasibility.

For more information contact the Public Service Commission, State Capitol, Bismarck, North Dakota 58505, 701-328-2400 or Relay North Dakota 1-800-366-6888 TTY. DAKOTA DATEBOOK

T-Rex written by Merry Helm

July 9, 2025 – It was about this time in 1905 that H. F. Osborn revealed the discovery of the "Dynamosaurus" or "dynamic lizard." Now known as the Tyrannosaurus, or T. rex, it surfaced for the first time just across the border in Montana. The discovery was in what's known as the Hell Creek Formation, which is visible in quite a few locations; in addition to areas of Montana, it also occurs in North and South Dakota. In North Dakota, the formation is about 300 feet thick in western North Dakota and about 150 feet thick in the Bismarck area.

A sub-tropical sea covered a great deal of North Dakota 65 million years ago. Feeder rivers flowing east from the Rocky Mountain area created huge silt deposits.

North Dakota paleontologist John Hoganson writes, "This delta was teeming with life, including T. rex and about 10 other kinds of dinosaurs, several other kinds of creatures like crocodiles, turtles, fish, salamanders—even small mammals. There were also exotic plants growing here at that time, including palm trees. It was hot and humid, a great place for reptiles like T. rex and humans drinking pinPa coladas."

The word Tyrannosaurus translates to "tyrant reptile." As someone aptly said, the Tyrannosaurus was "the most terrifying engine of destruction ever to have walked the earth." At about 40 feet long and roughly 20 feet tall, it weighed around eight tons—more than a modern African bull elephant. Its head alone was more than four feet long, and its jaws were lined with 60 six-inch teeth. Because its head was so large, its neck was short, thick and powerful, and it used its tail as a counterbalance. Support came from monolithic hind legs ending in three-toed feet tipped with long sharp talons. In stark contrast were its very small forelimbs and tiny two-clawed hands.

Paleontologist Dean Pearson discovered the first Tyrannosaurus in North Dakota. It's the largest collection of T. rex bones yet to be found in this state.

Based on research conducted by Hoganson and others, the farthest east the T. rex lived in North America was near Bismarck. Hoganson says scientists have found T. rex remains in about six spots south of Bismarck and Mandan and several in the Marmarth area.
